

"SINITE PARVULOS VENIRE AD ME." 1873.

ST. VIATEUR'S COLLEGE.

PREFACE.

In 1865, the Catholic clergy of Central Illinois, feeling the dearth of Catholic institutions, anxiously sought the means of alleviating this so much required necessity. In choosing guardians, their selection fell upon the order of St. Viator, a society whose only object is in unison with the prime motive of their Divine Lord: "Sinite parvulos venire ad me."

They were therefore called from their mother country, and although tendered the direction of a large institution in Chicago, they preferred a more healthy location, that they might stimulate their future charge to more strenuous exertion without impairing health. They settled themselves at Bourbonnais Grove, a quiet and handsome little Catholic village, whose age has cradled the great Chicago, whose retiring shades have hunted from their midst the busy and enterprising hero of the day, so that now it remains a grand and quiet seat for a Catholic school, a magnificent and shady retreat; in a word, a fit bower for the muses. It is situated about 50 miles south of Chicago, and two miles north-west of Kankakee city, forming a pleasant and convenient connection with the Illinois Central railroad. To speak and expatiate upon its healthy and salubrious qualities, it is but necessary to be informed that it is built upon the grand prairies of Illinois, where nothing obstructs the view till it is lost in unison of earth and sky, save the immediate groves and scenery of the college grounds, and that of the neighboring convent of Notre Dame. We are blessed, also, with that which affords the student an illimitable fund of enjoyment; the Kankakee river, furnishing good bathing in summer, and skating in winter. In a word, a finer retreat for a Catholic school is seldom found.

Although commencing so late our undertaking, a cloud bright and prosperous dawns upon us; we have already finished the main building of an institution that, we trust, is destined to take its rank amongst the grandest in the State. We have struggled and toiled; but God has seen fit to bless us.

The study hall, dormitory, refectory, chapel, and various class rooms, are constructed with the latest modern improvements; in view of securing the comfort and progress of the students.

In the study hall each has a desk and separate arm chair, thus avoiding contraction of the chest.

The dormitory is furnished with first-class materials, securing cleanliness and comfort.

In our Chapel the sacrifice of the Mass is offered up daily—a community Mass.

In the refectory we furnish a good substantial food, and of such a quality that our diet has become proverbial with students.

Our class rooms present a "nec plus ultra" appearance, fitted up with the latest improvements.

This institution possesses one advantage over others, the facility afforded its students of acquiring the French language; a portion of the free term is expressly allotted to conversation with French boys, many of whom frequent the schools as visitors, and many as scholars.
